ONE BLUE TARP

A piece of fabric ubiquitous to Maine creates the backdrop of a prize-winning play by Orono professor Travis Baker. Ornerly homeowner David Stillman is taking a stand. Actually, he is sitting atop a pile of junk in his front yard covered by a big, blue tarp. This lawn ornament is an affront to seasonal neighbor Gail Pritchard who wants to transform the small coastal town of Clara into her vision of what such a place should be. So to David, clutching his rifle, his is a symbolic stand for truth, justice, and the Maine tradition of not bending to the ideas of "people from away" who don't understand that a man's got a right to do what he wants on his own property even if it is an eyesore to tourists and upsets his wife. When wife Joan, daughter Judy, the grandson, a neighbor, and the local law cannot coax David or cajole Gail, the pair must resolve their issues at the Maine bastion of democracy - the town meeting. The eight characters on stage are easily recognizable as family, friends, neighbors, elected officials, or summer visitors. A blue tarp has a whole new meaning.

Come share an evening at the very special Lakewood Theater and Restaurant with us. Located on the western shore of Wesserunsett Lake, this venue is the oldest summer theater in America! With its classic charm and elegance, you can't help but fall in love with this facility. What a fun way to raise funds and allow us to provide more FREE trips for our nations' military and other heroes!
